

denverpost.com

Blogs - Winging It

Wednesday, October 10, 2007

- Home
- News
- Politics
- Sports
- Business
- Entertainment
- Lifestyle
- Opinion
- Outdoors
- Travel
- Classifieds
- Jobs
- Autos
- Homes
- Shopping

- Breaking News
- Denver & The West
- Columnists
- Crime
- Education
- Front Page
- Iraq
- Portraits of Valor
- Nation / World
- Obituaries
- Special Reports
- Weather
- Blogs
- Podcasts

Subscribe / Customer Care
PDF Electronic Edition
Mobile
Email Newsletters

RECENT POSTS

- Flight status alerts don't always know your flight status
- Big airports versus small airports
- Why are so many flights delayed?
- Airline threats to safety extend beyond terrorism
- Universal flight status phone line launches

TOPICS AND MORE

- DIA
- Flying
- Security
- Uncategorized
- About Winging It
- Contact Us

Those little 3 oz. bottles of liquid...

by Kelly Yamanouchi on September 20, 2007

We've all gotten used to looking for tiny bottles of toiletries, thanks to the Transportation Security Administration's restrictions on liquids in carry-on bags in effect since last year.

A company called 311 Travel Bag Inc. sells a "Clear Bag System" with reusable bags now in "fashion" editions (though a clear plastic bag is quite limited in how fashionable it can be). The more useful tool may be the "airless pumps" you can refill with your own shampoo and lotion instead of buying so many travel-size toiletries.

This is one of a number of companies trying to capitalize on our quest to miniaturize our liquid toiletries. I've become quite used to mentally dividing all matter into solid versus liquid when packing for a trip. We live in interesting times...

SEARCH BLOGS

We're blanketing the Front Range.

The Children's Hospital Network of Care